

Anarchism and Popular Movements for Change

*Free and open
to the public*

1:30 PM - 3:30 PM
Sunday March 2nd 2008
East Hartford Public Library
840 Main St, Basement Meeting Room

This talk will focus on the Irish anarchist movement as an example of effective organization and movement-building. A decade ago the active anarchist movement in Ireland consisted of little more than a dozen people in two small organizations. Today hundreds of people are active and one banned libertarian demonstration in 2004 saw 5,000 people take part. Anarchists are increasingly replacing Irish republicans as the boogeyman of the mainstream media. This talk explains how this breakthrough happened and details the various struggles anarchists have been involved in, including antiwar, environmental and workers struggles.

This doesn't require any prior knowledge of anarchism or Ireland and should be relevant to anyone interested in radical politics.

About the speaker:

Andrew Flood is an active anarchist organizer and writer, with twenty years experience in Ireland, most of that time as a member of the Workers Solidarity Movement. More recently, he has been working as a founding member of Common Cause in Ontario, Canada. His publishing record includes well over one hundred articles, translated into over nine languages, chapters published in three books, and articles in seven English language anti-authoritarian magazines and newspapers.

For more information contact Matt at 860.416.4575 or circleamatt@gmail.com.
Sponsored by the North Eastern Federation of Anarcho-Communists (NEFAC)

Anarchism and Popular Movements for Change

*Free and open
to the public*

1:30 PM - 3:30 PM
Sunday March 2nd 2008
East Hartford Public Library
840 Main St, Basement Meeting Room

This talk will focus on the Irish anarchist movement as an example of effective organization and movement-building. A decade ago the active anarchist movement in Ireland consisted of little more than a dozen people in two small organizations. Today hundreds of people are active and one banned libertarian demonstration in 2004 saw 5,000 people take part. Anarchists are increasingly replacing Irish republicans as the boogeyman of the mainstream media. This talk explains how this breakthrough happened and details the various struggles anarchists have been involved in, including antiwar, environmental and workers struggles.

This doesn't require any prior knowledge of anarchism or Ireland and should be relevant to anyone interested in radical politics.

About the speaker:

Andrew Flood is an active anarchist organizer and writer, with twenty years experience in Ireland, most of that time as a member of the Workers Solidarity Movement. More recently, he has been working as a founding member of Common Cause in Ontario, Canada. His publishing record includes well over one hundred articles, translated into over nine languages, chapters published in three books, and articles in seven English language anti-authoritarian magazines and newspapers.

For more information contact Matt at 860.416.4575 or circleamatt@gmail.com.
Sponsored by the North Eastern Federation of Anarcho-Communists (NEFAC)